GIVE EMERGING READERS A JUMP-START!

Supporting Early Literacy Learning in Libraries with Tadpole and Bullfrog Books

For beginning and emerging readers, access to thoughtfully crafted, up-to-date resources is essential. Early reader books are created with their young audience's developing vocabulary and reasoning skills in mind, making design critically important. Children's nonfiction publisher Jump! specializes in curriculum-aligned titles for early readers, with books educationally engineered to introduce visual, budding readers to early language and word skills and to the basic functions of research and the navigation of a nonfiction text.

Classroom and at-home approaches to guiding early and emerging readers, though similar, have distinct differences; there are key differences in the roles of the school librarian and the public librarian when it comes to curating books for these readers. We spoke with two librarians—one school, one public—about the ways in which early reader books are used in their libraries, the qualities of successful early reader books, and what makes books from the Jump! imprints so effective.

SUPPORTING EARLY READERS IN SCHOOLS

One of the biggest challenges Tali Balas faces when developing a collection and creating a curriculum is navigating gaps in an otherwise growing industry. “It has to stay fresh,” she explains. “The problem is that publishing goes in its own cycles and trends, so my books on, say, puppets might be really old, but nothing really new has been published because it isn’t a hot topic. Unfortunately, kids still really like those books, so they end up sitting on the shelf even though I’d rather replace them...that then drives my curriculum itself.”

A lower-school librarian at the Convent of the Sacred Heart school in New York, Balas works with students in preschool (starting with three-year-olds) through fourth grade. Her curriculum consists of three basic subjects as she works with students on library orientation and organization, research, and literature appreciation. Learning about research means different things for students at different levels. “In kindergarten, it’s beginning to understand that you can find answers in books, and that you should go to sources you trust in order to verify anything,” Balas says. “For first through fourth grade, all of my research projects are woven in with curriculum that’s happening in other classrooms.”

But in order to adequately assist students, especially those who are younger and less independent, Balas and her fellow librarians need the right tools. Nonfiction books for early readers require strong visual cues, such as large and crisp images, clear labeling, and simple vocabulary words that are easy to decipher. “I want a book to have page numbers, a table of contents, captions, labels, a glossary, and an index pretty much in any age range,” Balas says. But the most difficult thing for publishers to get right in early reader books, she continues, is the text. She often finds it inaccessible, “specifically because it becomes so general in its attempt to become simple that it’s basically useless as an actual research text.”

An example of books that do manage to find that difficult balance of transmitting information to young and emerging readers, she asserts, are the books from Jump!’s Bullfrog imprint. Of the two imprints discussed here, Bullfrog is the more advanced; its high-interest books designed for beginning readers in kindergarten through second grade. With titles limited to 24 pages and fewer than 100 words, Bullfrog books have an ATOS level of 1.0 or lower and feature carefully chosen photographs, a guide for teachers and parents, a picture glossary, and all of the back matter Balas prefers her books to have.

The second imprint, Tadpole, is even simpler, designed for preschoolers and kindergarteners just learning how to read. These books are shorter—16 pages and fewer than 60 words, with Fountas & Pinnell levels of A–E and feature repeating words and phrases to reinforce lessons. Like the Bullfrog books imprint, they are highly visual, with photographs clearly illustrating vocabulary words.

“The photography is great,” Balas says without hesitation. “It’s so eye-catching and vibrant, and the layout of the pages is really clear and easy to follow, which I think is incredibly important for both those age ranges.” She is enthusiastic about their design as an early-reader tool, but also as an instrument for teaching nonfiction: “For that emerging reader, I think the Bullfrog series is incredibly successful, and I really like the Tadpole series as a way specifically for teachers to be able to introduce nonfiction in their classroom, because I think they tend to focus on narrative. These would be great books to read with PreK—three- to five-year-olds—to introduce a topic or talk about something, because it’s so clear. You could do it easily in a class.”

Would Balas use these books in her curriculum? The answer, with students’ concerns first and foremost in mind, is a resounding yes. “It’s really hard to find books that put this much thought into how the book is read,” she says, “and often that makes things incredibly difficult on a young reader. These books themselves are designed really well, to the point where I was like, ‘I should buy these.’”

BRINGING EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES

If there’s one reader Chelsea Condren understands, it’s a kid who’s new to reading. An early literacy coordinator in the Early Childhood Education Department of the New York Public Library (NYPL), she specializes in working with young patrons (ages zero through five), supporting early literacy and childhood development in library branches throughout the city. Previously, Condren was a children’s librarian with the NYPL, working with readers ages zero through twelve.

The Early Childhood Education Department was established approximately six years ago in response to rapidly evolving child development research and an increase in the number of early literacy initiatives. Today, the department serves a variety of essential functions, supporting two dozen NYPL branches, maintaining partnerships with city organizations, and training staff in the principles of early literacy. A self-described “librarian by trade,” Condren also attends outreach events and conducts or assists with various programs.

Because initiatives of the Early Childhood Education department can be “so broad within the realm of early literacy,” Condren explains, early literacy books themselves often provide a foundation for coordinators and librarians alike. “We’re always thinking about the texts we use and the texts our librarians use,” she adds.

However, to incorporate these texts into the department’s mission and support branch staff who may intuitively know what to do despite not having official training, Condren’s department, in collaboration with the CUNY Personal Development Institute, has also developed a four-part early literacy training series. In addition to emphasizing the differences between babies, toddlers, and three- to four-year-olds, the series examines the significance of story times, family literacy workshops, and partnerships with the Department of Education and other outreach organizations, including nonprofits and hospitals. When it comes to implementing these four tenets, Condren stresses the necessity of branches to underscore that activities be “about what your community wants and needs.” Throughout, play reigns supreme as children are encouraged through text, photography, puppeteering, and more, to engage with the world around them.

For Condren, there’s no doubt the titles in Jump!’s Bullfrog and Tadpole imprints aptly introduce this kind of situational awareness to even the youngest emerging readers.

“I think a good nonfiction book perceives the world the way a child might,” she says, offering Deer Fawns, a Tadpole book, as a prime example. By beginning with four basic words—“‘I see a fawn,’ rather than ‘Here is a baby fawn’ or ‘This is a baby fawn,’” says Condren—Deer Fawns immediately places “the child in the context of that world.”

I think a good nonfiction book perceives the world the way a child might.

Similarly, a book’s illustrations must also “either reflect the world around a child or a world that maybe they have not yet seen or experienced,” Condren says, praising, like Balas, the Bullfrog and Tadpole books’ “clear, bright images.” In addition to the accessibility of the photography, Condren also touches on the cultural sensitivity of the images in Jump!’s titles, particularly those found in two Bullfrog books, Different Cultures and Different Families. “The images we’re seeing are reflective of the culture and the world that is around children every day,” says Condren. Furthermore, Bullfrog and Tadpole titles invite readers to do more than simply view photos; students can “walk through the book and talk about what they see,” Condren notes. “That’s an excellent tip.”

But elegant text and eye-catching imagery aren’t all Bullfrog and Tadpole books have to offer. Condren asserts the unique layout of these books only heightens their appeal for both classroom and branch library use. “Looking at both Bullfrog and Tadpole, there are ideas for parents and teachers on the first page on the left, which I really like,” she says. Along with pre- and post-reading activities, she points out that the tables of contents and indexes allow children to track the narrative within the story, even as this structure supports open-ended perusal. “You don’t necessarily have to read a nonfiction book cover to cover to get the lesson out of it or to help a developing reader,” Condren says. “One of the things that stuck out to me about the [Jump!] books is that with a lot of them, it would be great to just open a page and just talk.”

IN SUMMARY

As demonstrated by the recent growth in child development research, early literacy initiatives, and institutional support for early readers, the landscape is rapidly changing, and it is essential that librarians select titles reflecting the latest advancements. By engaging early readers with straightforward text, vibrant photography, deliberate structure, and an array of high-interest nonfiction subjects, Bullfrog and Tadpole books equip the next generation of educators, readers, and librarians with the ability to transform a text into a tool for further learning—and keep that progress going.

COMMUNITY HELPERS NEW TITLES!

What do you want to be when you grow up? After reading this series, kids will be shouting out answers to that question. Community Helpers gives young readers a basic introduction to how people in their communities perform their jobs. A photo diagram at the end of each book highlights places where these people work and the tools they use to do their jobs.

Pogo STEM books are designed to pique kids' interest in the subjects of Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics. Developed to support the Next Generation Science Standards, Pogo STEM features clear, engaging text, colorful spreads, and attractive infographics that invite children to start exploring STEM topics.

Pogo covers subjects in four domains:

- Life Sciences
- Physical Sciences
- Earth & Space Sciences
- Engineering, Technology, & Applications of Science

NGSS CONNECTION

Titles incorporate dimensions from the Framework for K12 Instruction (specifics vary by series):

- 1. Crosscutting Concepts such as Cause & Effect, Structure & Function, and Scale, Proportion, & Quantity
- 2. Scientific and Engineering Practices such as asking questions (science) and defining problems (engineering), and analyzing and interpreting data
- 3. Disciplinary Core Ideas such as Earth Materials & Systems and Growth & Development of Organisms

STEM IN THE SUMMER OLYMPICS NEW SERIES!

How do gymnasts use physics to take home gold medals? What technology make Olympians' bicycles the best? Each book in STEM in the Summer Olympics highlights a different Olympic event and the STEM concepts that help Olympians succeed. Bright, full-color photographs complement the carefully leveled text to make reading for understanding easy and fun.

MAN-MADE DISASTERS

From crossing vast oceans to exploring outer space, we continue to push the limits of our scientific and engineering capabilities. But what happens when our pursuits don't go as planned? What are the consequences, and how can we learn from these engineering mistakes? This series explores the science behind some of history's most catastrophic man-made disasters, from the crash of the Hindenburg to the explosion at Chernobyl.
